Club History

The Cape Fear Ballroom Dancers have been promoting and enjoying ballroom dancing in Fayetteville since 1993, when a group of 12 people who were taking dance lessons at a local studio decided they would like a social ballroom dance club in town so they could use the steps they were learning.

The first president, Chuck Wedge, organized the group into a club, and in September 1993 they held their first big dance, a Harvest Ball. At the time, Wedge said, “Figuring to break even if by some miracle we could sell 40 tickets, imagine our surprise when we had 75 attend and more than doubled our membership overnight.”

Over the years the club’s monthly dances have been in several venues, beginning with the Prince Charles, moving to the Holiday Inn at Bordeaux, the Gates Four Country Club, then the Elks Club, and others. Currently, the club leases Roland’s Dance Studio for its monthly dances and enjoys the Highland Country Club for its dinner-dances.

Fayetteville's only club devoted exclusively to ballroom dancing sponsors one dance party every month, and four of these each year are formal, dinner-dances.

More than just dancing, each party provides for a fun night out. Events are great for meeting people and for making new friends. Ballroom dancing is also a good way to get some exercise and to relieve stress.
